

OfficeCalendar Quick Start Guide

For Single and Multi-User Installations

Important Notes

OfficeCalendar allows you to network Outlook so you can share Outlook Calendar, Contact, Notes, and Task folders between Outlook users (or a single user), and also have access to these folders from the web and your mobile device (features vary among mobile devices). OfficeCalendar is comprised of 4 parts:

OfficeCalendar Server (On Demand or Local): where the Administrative controls are located, and the central function for how data flows between Outlook, OfficeCalendar Online and OfficeCalendar Mobile. The Server can be cloud based (strongly recommended for installations below 25 users), or run locally on any networked machine in your office (dedicated server is not required).

OfficeCalendar Client for Outlook: the add-in application installed locally into Outlook that allows you to sync your Outlook data with the OfficeCalendar Server.

OfficeCalendar Online: the hosted web service that allows you to access your Outlook data via the web and sync with OfficeCalendar Mobile. Your data will still be located in your Outlook installation, but will also now be accessible from anywhere you can get internet access on a PC or Mac. This service can be used stand-alone for people that don't have Outlook.

OfficeCalendar Mobile: installing the app on your iOS, Android, or Blackberry device allows you to wirelessly sync your Outlook data to your mobile device anywhere, anytime.

Sync Process Overview

OfficeCalendar On Demand Server
("Easiest")

When using OfficeCalendar On Demand Server, all the different components of OfficeCalendar sync with the hosted OfficeCalendar Server application directly. This means the data is immediately available to all components once the sync is complete.

Sync Process Overview

OfficeCalendar local Server
("Easy")

When using the OfficeCalendar local Server, the OfficeCalendar Client application in Outlook syncs with the local OfficeCalendar Server, which in turn publishes that information back and forth with the hosted OfficeCalendar Online service on a scheduled basis (the quickest is every 30 minutes). OfficeCalendar Mobile syncs with the OfficeCalendar Online service.
